

Against the odds.

Wipe out colon cancer? Chances are slim. But that's not a reason to give up. Not when you're committed to success. Not for researchers at the UA's Arizona Cancer Center. Working against the odds, they've developed a treatment with a 95% success rate at keeping colon cancer in remission. New cancer treatments are always a long shot. But if you've ever seen a Wildcat sink a three-pointer with two seconds remaining, you know — sometimes the long shot is the only way to win.
